PAMA ADVISORY BOARD

An early passion for art led Katherine to York University, where she managed student galleries while undertaking a BFA in visual art, cultural studies, and art history.

After shifting her focus and supporting senior management with project management at a local community health agency, Katherine decided to go back to school. In 2017, she completed an interdisciplinary Master's of Environmental Studies degree focused on education, storytelling, social justice, and food and water systems.

Katherine's personal and family history sparked her graduate research and exploration of identity and family stories through memoir, food, and arts-based methods. Her current arts practice is inspired by this ongoing work, her travels, and her interest in puppetry.
